This presentation will cover overall conditions in the industry, concerns relative to CRE and CRE concentrations, and wind up with a forward view, focusing on Interest Rate Risk and managing exposure to the expected rise in interest rates as we go forward. Daniel E. Frye has been the Area Director for the FDIC's Division of Supervision and Consumer Protection since July 1, 2002 and supervises the risk management examination program for the six New England states. He has periodically served in acting senior roles in the FDIC's regional and Washington offices, most recently as Deputy Director of the FDIC's Large Complex Financial Institutions branch. He has an extensive background in banking, including 17 years in bank supervision, 9 years working in various financial capacities for a NH banking company, and 6 years as an industry analyst for the FDIC's Division of Insurance and Research. Dan is a graduate of the University of Rhode Island and obtained his MBA from New Hampshire College. He is also a graduate of the Bank Executive Program (Duke University) and the Stonier Graduate School of Banking where he was elected class President and subsequently served a three-year term on the Stonier Advisory Board.
